Brianna's advertising firm is being down-sized. She'll soon be unemployed and practically penniless. Plus, the crazed stalker she's eluded for four years has finally tracked her to Dallas. Unless she can salvage her botched endorsement contract with another celebrity signature and save her job, she's sunk. Dubbed El Lobo by his adoring Country Music fans, Cort is tired of the limelight and yearns for what every man wants- a private life with a trophy wife. He signs Brianna's advertising contract and presents her with a deal of his own- marriage. After all, Brianna's beautiful and wholesome as apple pie, someone he trusts and respects. Although the chemistry between them is electrified, they each have an agenda. He wants a family and normalcy while she's desperately seeking a sanctuary from the evil that threatens her very existence. Returning from their idyllic honeymoon, the awaiting paparazzi reveals Brianna's scandalous past before all the world. Cort is furious. The little gold digger's made a complete fool of him in the eyes of his adoring fans. His bruised ego won't allow any excuses or explanations for her deception. If her ploy was to exploit him as a publicity stunt or purely a mercenary tactic, he's done with her. Except, now, he can't allow her to escape his possession until he's certain she isn't pregnant, which would make the price of getting rid of her negotiable. He'll pay whatever it takes for his baby,.. if there is one- And then, he'll kick her out of his life. Brianna has no choice. Either she becomes Cort's captive bride or she's on the street, running from the stalking lunatic, hot on her trail. Isolated together on Cort's Texas hill country ranch. It's a sensual battle of passion and pride with as many twists and turns as the Texas valley ranch on which they stage their battleground.
