Holly Halliday has an envious lifestyle, enjoying fabulous wealth and privilege and giving little thought to anything except enjoying herself and spending money. However, when her and flat-mate Bru have to leave their luxury apartment and move into the only place they can afford, life suddenly isn't so much fun. Added to that, brushes with minor fame lead to problems with the paparazzi and hassle from the public, meaning that Holly has to return to the village of her childhood and the influence of her over-bearing mother, sexpert author and general super-celeb Marina Halliday.

This wasn't how Holly envisaged her late twenties to be and she realises that something has to change. But where does change truly begin, in your head or in your heart? Can Holly discover happiness and find love with someone who will appreciate her for more than her expert knowledge of shoes?
