My Eclectic Collection: Broken Reflection (From the Confines of my Mind Book 3) Ronald Allen Bell
The truth of all we see, and the way in which we perceive what we see, can be drastically different for someone who suffers from mental disorders such as Manic Depression, or Bipolar Disorder. When not medicated, or improperly medicated, someone who suffers from these types of afflictions rarely views their own self image as do those they interact with on a daily basis. The nightmare which you can endure suffering from depression causing disorders albeit likely laden with lain compositions, is a horrifying experience in which the affected more often than not, cannot differentiate reality from fantasy.

What we see isn't always real.

What we see, is a Broken Reflection.

In this final installment of the, From the Confines of my Mind series, the minds ability to see one to the brink of destruction takes the driver seat.

The series ends with the authors' best, and features the title poem from the second book, Scattered Endz..., which was held for the finale due to it's composition of applicatory material, as well as for the reason of seeing off the series with what is sure to be hailed as an artistic, poetic masterpiece.

Enjoy.
